SINGLE 'FIGHTING CLIMATE ZOMBIES'

ELECTRONIC PRESS KIT

BIO

Jenske Verhamme, Nona Huysegems and Sigi Willems met during their student days in Leuven where they specialized themselves in emerging academic disciplines such as fungal physics and sitopic cyborg studies. Full-time nonsense salesman and qualified policy economist Tijs Fastré was brought in as a drummer to shatter the prevailing, neoliberal dogmas of our time. After being active in numerous other musical projects throughout their youth, the members decided to form a new band in April 2021: Nona Problemo crawled out of its stork egg! Through wins in the pop competition Sound Track in the province of Flemish Brabant in late 2021, Nona Problemo launched itself like a rocket (on renewable energy) in the Flemish music landscape.

EP RELEASE

For the production of their first EP (expected in February 2023), they called on the now experienced 'rot' Bert Vliegen, known from Whispering Sons and Teen Creeps (who, by the way, took care of about half of the Sound Track laureates). For mixing and mastering, Bert was assisted by Michiel de Maesseneer and Laurens Grossen. It resulted in an eclectic EP that tries to reconcile the playful indie pop of bands like Los Campesinos! and The Fiery Furnaces with the danceable melancholy of New Order and LCD Soundsystem, and the weirdness of Liars or The Flaming Lips. Or as they like to call it themselves: 'radically naive eco wave'.

SINGLE 'FIGHTING CLIMATE ZOMBIES'

In their second single "Fighting Climate Zombies," Nona Problemo once again expresses their love for our beloved planet. This time the song revolves around the absurdity of governments and the wealthy elite not responding to the dire consequences of climate change. Despite so many people taking to the streets and desperately pleading for radical systemic change, not much is changing. It is as if we, the people, the so-called "99 percent," are waging a surreal, apocalyptic war against "climate zombies": the so-called "1 percent", the capitalist rulers of the military-industrial complex. General Greta Thunberg leads the way in this seemingly lost battle. Her radical naivete and unconditional commitment are the last hope.

The ecological indie fairy tale consists of a mix of eccentric strings with singer Sigi's fragile voice reminiscent of Flaming Lips' "The Soft Bulletin" album, combined with the melancholic eeriness of Liars.

This single, unlike the first single (see here), will not be accompanied by a homemade music video, but a live session with video is planned sometime in the first half of December. Filming will take place at Verbeke Foundation to visualize the song's somber, apocalyptic vibe. The video and content will respond to DIY, as if the participants really are survivors of a climate zombie attack. To make this happen, they are once again reaching out to young talented people from their own circles.
